SECOND TIME'S A CHARM AS JESSE JACKSON JR. ENTERS FEDERAL PRISON IN NORTH CAROLINA

Jesse Jackson Jr. departs after his sentencing hearing in August, when he was given 30 months in prison for misuse of campaign funds. BRIAN CASSELLA/TRIBUNE FILE

Chicago Tribune

WASHINGTON When an attorney for Jesse Jackson Jr. announced a day prematurely that the former congressman had entered prison, she heralded the dignitaries who were poised to visit him, including Pastor Rick Warren, the Rev. Louis Farrakhan and two members of Congress.

Jackson finally did surrender Tuesday, but such publicity runs counter to what many experts urge federal prisoners to do: Check your ego at the door.

Art Beeler, a former warden at the prison now housing Jackson, the Butner Federal Correctional Complex in North Carolina, said inmates do well to stay busy and keep a low profile.

"I've had high-profile offenders who thought they were entitled and they had very rough times inside the institution," he said. "They still thought they had the initials behind their names."

Jackson, 48, a South Side Democrat, served in Congress nearly 17 years before he quit last November amid a federal corruption probe. In August, he was sentenced to 30 months in prison for looting his campaign fund of $750,000.

According to Beeler, most convicts come into prison humbly, wanting to serve their time and not cause problems. He said if he were still in charge of Butner, he would avoid giving a prison law library job to Jackson, who has a law degree.

"Inmates will try to get other inmates involved in their cases, especially if they think they have some sort of pull. He can't get caught up in that nonsense at all," Beeler cautioned.

Beeler, who retired after 33 years with the Bureau of Prisons, including a 1988-89 stint at Chicago's Metropolitan Correctional Center, said he thinks Jackson is better suited to work as a tutor or in the chapel.

Cheri Nolan, managing director of Federal Prison Consultants, an Ocala, Fla.-based firm that advocates for inmates, said Tuesday that during 30 years in criminal justice, she had never heard of a news release announcing someone's surrender to prison—until a publicist for Jackson's lawyer issued one Monday night announcing the ex-congressman's imprisonment.

Nolan said she would never urge one of her clients to issue a news release trumpeting such news.

"Prison is not something to be celebrated—it's punishment," she said. "It's a separation from society for something you have done wrong, and our clients would prefer to be anonymous in the process."

Nolan took particular issue with the section of the news release indicating that Jackson's visits with outsiders may begin as early as Nov. 8. The release said his family would come, as would well-known ministers and Reps. Hank Johnson (D-Ga.) and Marcia Fudge (D-Ohio).

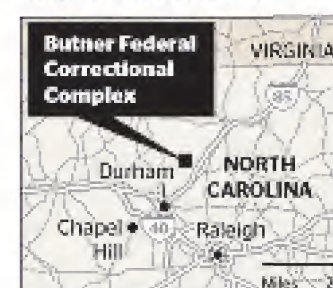

"The Bureau of Prisons is going to determine who's going to see him—and when they're going to see him," Nolan said.

WHY THE DELAY?

Jesse Jackson Jr. showed up at Butner federal prison in North Carolina on Monday, but officials refused to let him in. On Tuesday, when they admitted him to begin serving his 30-month sentence, they didn't explain what the holdup had been a day earlier. But one official acknowledged that press accounts about a paperwork problem were "very accurate."

JESSE JACKSON JR. ENTERS PRISON

The Butner Federal Correctional Complex is comprised of five separate institutions: the medical center, two medium-security prisons, a low-security prison and a minimum-security prison camp. Former Rep. Jesse Jackson Jr., who entered Butner on Tuesday, is in the camp, the least secure area.

TRIBUNE

Once and for all, quit blaming the victims

Niki Fritz

redeye@tribune.com
@fritztrack

I feel like I've written nothing lately but columns about how much rape culture sucks. Honestly it's depressing as all heck, and I really wish there was nothing left to say on the matter. But unfortunately, people keep getting raped, and then media commentary flares up with some blame-the-victim bull, and, well, here we are talking about rape again.

This time it is Maryville, Mo., the uglier version of Steubenville, Ohio, if that is even possible. The (alleged) narrative is becoming common in America: high schoolers, drinking, raping, video taping, dumping the girls and then pretending it was consensual sex. Two years after the alleged rape, Internet vigilantes are calling for an investigation. And while two girls and their families wait for justice, everyone seems to have an opinion about how to stop such ugliness in the future. The "newest" advice from a Slate columnist: "College women: Stop getting drunk."

Of course I get it. Incidents like Maryville are horrifying and everyone wants it to stop. Drinking seems to be at heart of matter, so I understand wanting to address it particularly, as it is clearly influencing those making the poor decisions and doing the rapey stuff.

Thus, logic would follow: tell boys to stop drinking and then they'll stop raping!

But of course that is silly. Boys will be boys. They drink, rape, play video games and leave the toilet seat up because that is, like, biology. (Note: This is extreme sarcasm. Men should be appalled that society doesn't think they have enough self-control to not rape.)

So if men biologically can't stop drinking and raping, then of course we should be instructing women to stop drinking and putting themselves at "risk." This is not new sexist advice.

It is often explained like this: You wouldn't get really drunk and then walk down the middle of a street with a sign that says, "Hey robbers! I've got $1,000 in singles stuffed in my pants!" So why would you be a teenage girl walking, well, anywhere? Of course the truly insulting part of this analogy is that it suggests a woman's body is the equivalent of $1,000, something that can be stolen. Simply owning a vagina means you are advertising your own rape-ability.

But not only is this advice insulting, it just doesn't work. Young women are still getting drunk. But on an even more basic level, it doesn't work because a girl getting drunk with a dude never thinks, "Oh, he has a penis—he's probably trying to get me drunk so he can force himself onto my passed-out body." Because that penis is actually her friend, her crush, her co-worker, her lab partner; it is probably someone she likes enough to drink with, and trusts enough to not worry about guarding herself at all times.

When we talk about the "drunk rape victim," we make that survivor an "other," someone different from us. "She was drunk and stupid. That couldn't be me." Or, "My guy friends would never do that." We blame the woman and her drinking partially to make ourselves feel like that couldn't happen to us. But these young women aren't that different from you and me. They just have less luck.

I'm not saying we all shouldn't drink less. (No one ever needs to do a Malort shot ever again.) But drinking less will not solve our rape issue. Only when we address why young men are raping can we move on and talk about more pleasant things, like the best pop-culture Halloween costumes for 2013. I call dibs on Grumpy Cat!

AUTO THEFTS PER YEAR

BY THE NUMBERS

■ 2008 ■ 2009 ■ 2010 ■ 2011 ■ 2012 ■ 2013*

To take a look at Chicago's car thefts by the numbers, RedEye used the city's data portal to analyze reports of motor vehicle thefts from 2008 to Oct. 8, 2013. M.S. *2013 TO OCT. 8

NUMBER OF ARRESTS

DUDE, WHERE'S MY CAR?

IT'S NO 'GRAND THEFT AUTO,' BUT CHICAGO DOES DEAL WITH BOOSTED RIDES

By Mick Swasko | REDEYE

It takes more than a push of a controller button to steal a car in Chicago, but that doesn't stop auto theft in the city.

Not the case in Rockstar Games' "Grand Theft Auto V." With 15 million copies of the game sold worldwide in the first three days of its September release, gamers have been busy lifting cars in the fictional city of Los Santos for weeks.

The city accounted for 63 percent of vehicle thefts in the state in 2010.

63%

Almost 29 million copies of the game have sold in the first six weeks, kotaku.com reported Tuesday, making car theft a big business since the game's online and social features launched Oct. 1.

Meanwhile, Chicago is racking up its own numbers when it comes to auto theft. The city accounted for 63 percent of Illinois vehicle thefts in 2010, according to the Illinois Motor Vehicle Theft Prevention Council. So far in 2013, about 22 cars have been stolen each day, amounting to 8,089 automobile thefts through Oct. 8, according to city crime data.

About 487 stolen cars have been recovered this year, with 362 arrests made in connection with the cases. Compared with the same period in 2012, the number of thefts is down about 21.5 percent.

Reasons for auto theft are plenty, the theft prevention council says, but four basic motives exist: joyriding, personal use, transportation to or from a crime scene, or for profit from selling the cars.

From 2008 to 2012, more than 70,000 vehicles were reported stolen in Chicago, with 2011 recording the most at 15,636. The thefts span throughout the city, with 42 of the city's 50 wards recording more than 100 stolen cars in 2013. Going back to 2008, Chicago's 6th Ward, which includes Englewood, Park Manor, Greater Grand Crossing, Chatham, Chesterfield, West Chesterfield and Roseland Heights, has consistently been a hot spot for theft, ranking in the Top 3 most affected areas each year. Woof! Dog program isn't working out

City Hall's effort to get more Chicago residents to register their dogs is largely a bust, City Clerk Susana Mendoza acknowledged Tuesday.

During a two-year push, the city added 11,500 dog tags to bring the rolls up to almost 41,000 as of June 30, records indicate. The Anti-Cruelty Society, however, estimates there are nearly 653,000 dogs in Chicago.

Mendoza told aldermen that the dog licensing effort won't succeed until the likelihood of getting a ticket of $30 to $200 for failing to get a dog tag increases.

"I really firmly believe that without a strong enforcement piece attached to any kind of licensing, you really just don't even do the licensing, because if people know there's no repercussions for not getting the permit, then they're not really inclined to get the permit," Mendoza said.

Mendoza promoted the effort to step up dog tag purchases during her first budget hearing two years ago. Although Mendoza's office issues the tags, the clerk said enforcement falls mostly to the Department of Animal Care and Control.

A city spokeswoman said Animal Care and Control has stepped up dog tag enforcement, resulting in 559 citations so far this year, a 57 percent increase from the same period in 2011.

Higher priorities include animal abuse, cruelty and bites, she said.

Tags start at $5 per year and rise to $50 for dogs that are not spayed or neutered.

Picking up the pieces

SEASIDE PARK, N.J. A year after Superstorm Sandy inundated the East Coast with record flooding that left 159 people dead, residents of hard-hit New Jersey and New York shore communities still have a ways to go in rebuilding damaged homes.

New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie began his day at the beach town of Seaside Park, where homes were flooded by 2 to 3 feet of water when the storm roared ashore.

It was hit again by disaster in September when wiring damaged by the flooding sparked an enormous fire that destroyed several blocks of boardwalk that had been rebuilt after Sandy.

Christie recalled how, in the immediate aftermath of the storm that damaged about 650,000 homes along the coast—with New Jersey, New York and Connecticut the hardest hit—he had estimated it could take two years to recover.

"We're about halfway there," Christie told town firefighters and local officials Tuesday. "We all have to acknowledge that there are still thousands of people out of their homes."

Throughout the northeast, residents in storm-hit shore communities are still coping with damaged homes and waiting for $48 billion in federal aid pledged for rebuilding, which officials have acknowledged has been paid out slowly.

Federal officials on Monday unveiled plans to release a second $5 billion round of funding from the Sandy relief fund, for New York state and city, New Jersey, Connecticut, Maryland and Rhode Island. The money is aimed at rebuilding and repairing homes damaged by the storm.

Sandy, a rare late-season tropical storm, made landfall at slightly below hurricane strength but its winds extended over 1,000 miles, causing a storm surge that flooded downtown Manhattan and long stretches of the New Jersey shore, leaving millions in the dark, some for weeks.

Hawaii debates same-sex marriage

Hawaii started debating on Monday a proposal that would make the popular wedding and honeymoon destination the 15th state to legalize same-sex marriage, repealing a voter-approved constitutional amendment that banned gay matrimony.

Obama may ban spying on leaders

President Obama may ban U.S. spying on allied leaders as part of a review of intelligence gathering, a senior Obama administration official said Tuesday amid a diplomatic uproar over the National Security Agency's surveillance ability.

Syrian hackers hit Obama site

The Syrian Electronic Army, a hacker group sympathetic to Syrian President Bashar Assad, on Monday seized control of an online tool used by an advocacy organization for President Obama to redirect links sent from his Twitter and Facebook accounts.

BRIAN CASSELLA/TRIBUNE

Derrick Rose finished with 12 points.

BRIAN CASSELLA/TRIBUNE

Led by LeBron James' 17 points, the Heat had seven players finish with double-digit points.

NUCCIO DINUZZO/TRIBUNE

WELL, THAT WAS RUDE

The Heat just had to ruin D-Rose's return, didn't they?

RedEye

Now that Derrick Rose is back, the Bulls are destined to win the NBA championship ...

... is what Bulls fans would love to believe. And you can't blame them for their Rose-y outlook. The superstar's knee appears to be 100 percent and he says he's better than he was before his injury.

We'll have to wait until next spring to find out if the 2013-14 season plays out that way. On Monday, all the Bulls could do was try to knock off the defending champion Heat. In Miami. On the night they received their rings.

RedEye breaks down each quarter through Rose-colored glasses.

FIRST QUARTER

Rosey: Near the end of the quarter, Kirk Hinrich fouls LeBron James just hard enough to keep him from scoring. Don't apologize, Kirk.

Rosier: Chris Bosh goes strong to the hoop ... and Carlos Boozer stuffs him. Boozer plays defense? This changes everything.

Rosiest: Rose glides in, double pumps and finishes with an acrobatic layup to put the Bulls on the board. We've said it before, we'll say it again: We missed you, D-Rose!

HEAT 17, BULLS 15

SECOND QUARTER

Rosey: The Heat made 58 percent of their 3-pointers in the first half. That can't possibly continue, right?

Rosier: Rose goes down while playing defense on a Norris Cole crossover. He looked silly, but the knee's OK!

Rosiest: Boozer finished the first half with 19 points. Good sign. And plenty of time for his teammates to wake up.

HEAT 54, BULLS 33

THIRD QUARTER

Rosey: Rose for 3! His first of the season. He worked on his shooting A LOT while he was out.

Rosier: Midway through the quarter, Rose fires ahead to Joakim Noah, who slams it home. The whole thing takes about .35 seconds. Blink and you missed it.

Rosiest: Jimmy Butler's a starter now. Partly because he does things like steal the ball and coast in for easy buckets. Which he did three times in the quarter.

HEAT 78, BULLS 58

FOURTH QUARTER

Rosey: Well, the Bulls are 0-1. So 81-1 is still a possibility.

Rosier: Boozer CRUSHED it for the Bulls, finishing with 31 points and 7 rebounds.

Rosiest: Repeat after us: D-Rose is back. D-Rose is back. D-Rose is back ...

FINAL SCORE:
HEAT 107, BULLS 95

HE'S THE 1

Derrick Rose is back. That's nothing new. Neither is LeBron James' distaste for the Bulls. Larry Grant, on the other hand...

1	Now that Derrick Rose is back and playing for the Bulls I now have two favorite people named Rose in my life. (Hi, Mom!)	... one is the one-best number.	... LeBron can shut his ugly piehole.	... we can go back to watching Jay Cutler's groin. Duh, you know what I mean.	... we can enjoy watching him play again and stop thinking about Jay Cutler's groin.
2	Why does LeBron James dislike the Bulls?	He's shook. Because you know what? It's not safe for you in this zoo. Never think that we're not from Chicago for one second.	Because Chicago every fall has figured out a way to beat the Heat.	Because Bulls fans don't fall for his fake terrycloth hairline.	They remind him of Michael Jordan, a shadow he'll never rise from.	LeBron James dislikes anyone that is not LeBron James.
3	What can you tell us about new Bears linebacker Larry Grant?	I loved his work with Parliament and that "One in a Million You" song!	He was set to go to UF but didn't meet academic standards. So he went to QSU. Qbvi.	Wasn't "Larry Grant" a TV show in the 1970s?	His uncle Horace was a great power forward with the Bulls.	Probably about as much as anyone else on the team could right now.
4	Any advice for new Bears backup quarterback Jordan Palmer?	Yeah, don't be like your brother. Or ... be like him? Either way.	The name Jordan in Chicago ... is synonymous with high steaks.	Make friends with the O-line. Try to get them to see you as a person.	Change your name. There's only one Jordan in Chicago.	Play well or get a Halloween mask to hide behind.
5	What would you get Brandon Saad now that he's 21?	"receives email" Wait, his name isn't Larry GRAHAM? Then whose jersey did I just order?	All of the shots ... on the goal.	Do as Kaner says, not as Kaner does.	An IDU for a beer bath, AFTER the 2014 Stanley Cup Final. Yes! Yes! Yes!	I'd take Saad to happy hour.

Jay Cutler walks off the field after being injured last week.

BRIAN CASSELLA/TRIBUNE

CUTLER: I'M OPTIMISTIC

Chicago Tribune

The timetable for Jay Cutler's return from a torn groin muscle remains ambiguous. But this much is certain: The Bears quarterback is aiming to be back playing before the four-week prognosis that was originally given after he suffered the injury Oct. 20 in Washington.

"That's the goal," Cutler said Tuesday.

For the second consecutive day, Cutler attended but did not participate in the Bears' practice. He played catch off to the side, coach Marc Trestman said, but did not move around.

Cutler also spoke to reporters for the first time since suffering the injury. And while the exchange was brief and at times curt, Cutler said he's feeling better and remaining optimistic.

"Just doing whatever the doctors and trainers tell me," he said. "That's kind of the world we're living in right now."

As for those promises receiver Brandon Marshall has been making that Cutler will be back sooner than people think—including one vow made Monday on WMVP-AM 1000 that the quarterback will return Nov. 10 against Detroit—Cutler grinned.

"He's optimistic," he said. "And so am I. So we'll see how it goes."

BLACKHAWKS 6, OTTAWA 5

Hats off to Captain Serious! Jonathan Toews scored three goals, helping the Hawks erase a 4-2 deficit in a victory over Ottawa at the United Center on Tuesday. The bad news? Goaltender Nikolai Khabibulin was pulled after giving up three goals on seven shots in the second period (four total). But Corey Crawford held off the Senators the rest of the way.

NOVEMBER CONCERT GUIDE

Kanye and Chance headline November's 30 best concerts

By Andy Downing | FOR REDEYE

Hip-hop fans have plenty to look forward to as November rolls around, including performances from hometown hero (and one half of Kimye) Kanye West, Seattle "Same Love" rapper Macklemore and a fast-rising Chicago MC, Chance the Rapper, who headlines a pair of high-profile shows at the Riviera Theatre late in the month. In addition, there are great concerts coming for fans of sensual R&B (John Legend), sloppy rock 'n' roll (Diarrhea Planet) and even world music (Bombino). Here are the month's 30 best shows.

A$AP Ferg
GETTY IMAGES

Okkervil River

Saturday at Metro

On "The Silver Gymnasium," the highly literate Texas rockers reflect on the innocence of youth, turning out a detailed song cycle about coming of age in small-town America.

A$AP Ferg

Sunday at Concord Music Hall

The Harlem rapper (and A$AP Rocky acolyte) stakes out his own dark territory on his sometimes-violent debut LP "Trap Lord."

My Bloody Valentine

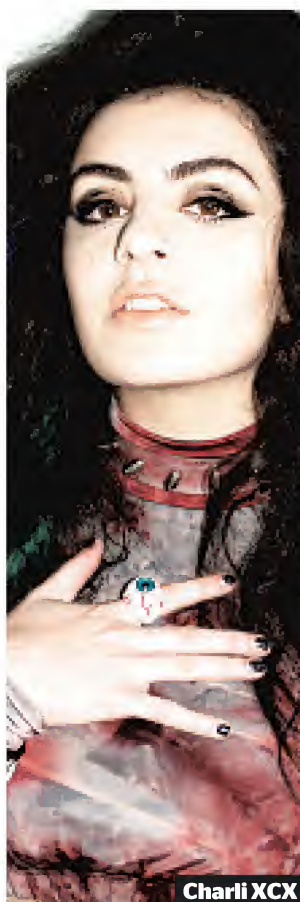

Sunday at Aragon Ballroom

Kevin Shields finally delivered the band's long-in-the-works new album, "m b v," earlier this year, more than two decades after the crew released the all-time classic "Loveless."

Macklemore & Ryan Lewis

Monday at UIC Pavilion

The Seattle MC might rhyme about wearing secondhand clothes, but the massive success of singles like "Same Love" and "Thrift Shop" now make it a choice rather than a necessity.

Charli XCX

Pink

Tuesday at United Center

On her high-flying Truth About Love Tour, Pink belts out a number of songs while soaring through the air tethered to a harness like a pop idol Peter Pan.

Charli XCX

Nov. 6 at Schubas

The British goth-pop belter favors songs about romance, but they don't always paint relationships in a flattering light.

Sparks

Nov. 6 and 7 at Lincoln Hall

L.A.-born brothers Ron and Russell Mael started recording music together in the early '70s and have been cited as an influence by artists as far-flung as ABBA, the Ramones and Arcade Fire.

Kanye West

Nov. 7 and 9 at United Center

Offstage, the opinionated Chicago rapper has become a divisive figure, inspiring Twitter trending topics and media debate seemingly every time he opens his mouth. The music on his latest, "Yeezus," has been similarly polarizing, earning praise for its production and general fearlessness and deserved criticism for an ugly strain of misogyny running through some of his lyrics.

Jessie Ware

Nov. 9 at House of Blues

It wouldn't shock if the smoky British belter recorded the theme song for the next installment in the James Bond series.

John Legend

Nov. 10 at Chicago Theatre

Legend might have graced his fourth album, "Love in the Future," with a forward-looking title, but the lush R&B arrangements are firmly rooted in the genre's past.

Macklemore & Ryan Lewis

Sleigh Bells*Nov. 10 at Metro*

On its third LP, "Bitter Rivals," the Brooklyn duo changes up the established formula (hip-hop beats + it-goes-to-11 guitar riffage = critical and commercial success), incorporating quieter songs aside the usual stadium-rocking fare.

Colin Meloy*Nov. 11 at Park West*

Meloy tends to embrace more ornate arrangements with his band the Decemberists, but he'll strip things back for this folk-leaning solo gig.

Saintseneca*Nov. 12 at Schubas*

Get used to hearing the name of this Ohio-based folk-rock crew, which is set to release its excellent new album on Anti (home to Tom Waits and Neko Case) early next year.

James Blake*Nov. 13 at Riviera Theatre*

The British producer/singer-songwriter titled his latest "Overgrown," but both his arrangements and approach to songcraft are born of admirable artistic restraint.

Pelican*Nov. 13 at Bottom Lounge*

The instrumentals pioneers are one of the best, most consistent bands to emerge from our city in the last decade. Its latest, "Forever Becoming," continues the winning streak with songs that alternately hypnotize and wage full-on ground warfare.

Diarrhea Planet*Nov. 16 at Beat Kitchen*

Yes, it's a terrible band name, but the guys in Diarrhea Planet overcome the [bleep] moniker with an assortment of rowdy rock tunes that call to mind their pals in Titus Andronicus.

MGMT*Nov. 19 at Aragon Ballroom*

The band distances itself further from its more pop-oriented leanings on "MGMT," a psych-leaning album that comes on like a bad acid trip.

Bernhoft*Nov. 19 at Lincoln Hall*

The Norwegian singer might have stolen his architectural hairdo from Macklemore, but his sound is steeped in vintage soul.

Sleigh Bells
BROCK BRAKE/
REDEYE FILE

Sky Ferreira
GETTY IMAGES

Gary Clark Jr.Nov. 19 at the Vic

While the Texas bluesman hasn't been able to find his stride on record just yet, his concerts have become must-see events that present blues not as a museum piece, but as a living, breathing form that still has the ability to surprise.

Avett Brothers*Nov. 22 at UIC Pavilion*

The music on the Brothers' latest, "Maggie and the Dandelion," is pretty but inconsequential, a soundtrack to lazy Sunday mornings spent dusting and putting away clothes.

Selena Gomez*Nov. 22 at Allstate Arena*

Though the "Spring Breakers" star has distanced herself some from her family-friendly Disney roots, her flavorless pop music still sounds as though it were created in a boardroom rather than the studio.

High on Fire*Nov. 22 at Metro*

Frontman Matt Pike is clean and sober following a stint in rehab last year, but the metal trio's music has lost none of its woodland-leveling power.

Sky Ferreira*Nov. 23 at the Vic*

The singer has hit a few bumps in recent months, including an arrest for drug possession and a vocal injury that cut short her time opening for Vampire Weekend, but her stellar debut, "Night Time, My Time," should silence even her most vocal critics.

Cults*Nov. 23 at Metro*

Though onetime lovers Brian Oblivion and Madeline Follin endured a very public breakup, they decided to soldier on in Cults, releasing a new album, "Static," that hints at their falling out.

Bombino*Nov. 23 at Martyrs'*

The Tuareg guitarist released one of the year's best albums in the Dan Auerbach-produced "Nomad."

Paramore*Nov. 24 at UIC Pavilion*

Paramore incorporates countless musical styles on its latest (pop-punk, new wave and even gospel make their presence felt), yet it all feels of a piece due to frontwoman Hayley Williams' remarkable pipes.

Hayley Williams of Paramore
CHRIS SWEDA/TRIBUNE FILE

Bombino

Lupe Fiasco*Nov. 26 at House of Blues*

The outspoken Chicago rapper recently dropped the first track from the forthcoming "Tetsuo & Youth," a heartfelt tune that features a vocal assist from British singer Ed Sheeran.

Chance the Rapper*Nov. 27 and 29 at Riviera Theatre*

The Chicago native, fresh off the success of his rightfully heralded mixtape "Acid Rap," continues his big year with a pair of his largest concerts to date.

Fall Out Boy*Nov. 29 at Metro*

The locals returned to their punk roots on the fun-if-forgettable "Pax-Am Days," an eight-song bonus disc tacked onto a reissue of its hiatus-ending "Save Rock and Roll."

Twenty One Pilots*Nov. 29 at House of Blues*

The Ohio duo incorporates everything from hip-hop to piano balladry in its kitchen-sink approach, but the real selling point is its raucous live show.

A classic Christmas scene, immortalized

Chicago Tribune

A moment of frozen-tongued terror from the holiday classic "A Christmas Story" has been frozen in bronze.

Northwest Indiana tourism officials on Tuesday unveiled a statue of the "triple-dog dare" scene from the popular holiday film at a welcome center south of Interstate 80-94 just over the state line, commemorating the 30th anniversary of a film based on the short stories of Hammond native Jean Shepherd.

Actor Scott Schwartz posed next to his bronze likeness as Flick, a sculpture produced by the same studio that made the statue of Michael Jordan outside the United Center.

Schwartz had just 16 lines in the film, none as memorable as "Tthuck! Tthuck!" as reluctant daredevil Flick finds that, in fact, your tongue will stick if you lick a frozen flagpole.

"This is just so cool," Schwartz said.

Hammond was hometown to author and radio host Jean Shepherd, whose fictionalized accounts of growing up in pre-World War II "Homan, Ind.," formed the basis for the movie. Shepard's baritone narrated the movie as the adult version of protagonist Ralphie Parker.

The real Flick, Shepherd's childhood neighbor Jack Flickinger, maintained that the flagpole dare never happened, said his daughter, Jean Howell. Flickinger for decades ran Flick's Tap, about two miles north of the welcome center on Kennedy Avenue, until the 1980s.

"My dad always said no [he never stuck his tongue to the pole]," Howell said, adding that her father never appreciated the fame Shepherd's work thrust on him. "He wouldn't allow the book in the house."

The South Shore Convention & Visitors Authority is hoping to tap into a wave of nostalgia for the film, which opened to lukewarm ticket sales in 1983 only to become a sleeper hit on TV and a holiday franchise.

Visitors Authority officials expect the statue, which is attached to an aluminum flag pole, will become a stop for travelers on I-80-94, though they intend to post warnings lest fans attempt to mimic Flick's pose in cold weather—and really, if triple-dog dared, who could resist?

"There will be signs," spokeswoman Nicki Mackowski-Gladstone said. "If people choose to do so, it will be lick at your own risk."

FIRE STARTER

Can this new Korean barbecue live up to its legendary address?

By Michael Nagrant | FOR REDEYE

I rarely watch a movie or dine at a restaurant twice. There are too many new movies to see and so many new restaurants waiting to be discovered. But there are exceptions to every rule. I lost exact count a while ago, but I know I've seen "The Karate Kid" (the original) more than 30 times and I've dined at Hae Woon Dae, a stellar Korean barbecue joint in West Rogers Park, at least 10 times; it was one of my favorite spots until it closed in February. There was little time to mourn, though. Pete Cho, who, with his mom, Stella, owns the nearby Korean bar Yeowoosai—and once DJed at Lol-lapalooza—picked up the space and recently opened Gogi as a tribute to his late father, Tiger, who passed away in June. "My dad always wanted to open a Korean barbecue spot or a combination bar/karaoke joint," Cho said. "When Hae Woon Dae closed, they asked him if he wanted the spot and my dad asked me if I wanted to be involved." I stopped in to see if Cho's new Korean barbecue spot could fill the void in my stomach and my heart.

Gogi
6240 N. California
Ave. 773-274-6669
Give it some time

● The scene

The worn orange laminate tables and chipped bamboo accents of the old Hae Woon Dae dining room have been transformed. In their place, Cho's uncle installed sleek black tables, leather booths and white pendant lights. The dingy private grilling rooms have been punched up with bright crimson paint. Gogi channels a chill cocktail lounge and bucks the trend that traditional Korean barbecue only happens in neglected utilitarian spaces.

● The meat

The marinade on the bulgogi, a thin cut of sirloin ($18), was a tasty mix of soy, garlic, chili and sugar; while the flavor was punchy, the grilling process at Gogi was flawed. Hae Woon Dae used to have blazing hot pre-fired buckets of charcoal brought tableside by big, burly dudes who used a couple of thin pieces of cardboard to protect their fingers from the searing heat of the buckets as they carried them. The bulgogi at Gogi was placed in a lukewarm cast-iron skillet shaped like a pig-cow (the body looks like pig, but the face looks like a cow) heated by a weak gas flame that went out twice while my bulgogi steamed in a grayish mass on the cooktop. The same skillet was used to fire up the samgyeopsal (pork belly, $18), which did caramelize on the skillet, but was relatively flavorless. "The old charcoal starter wasn't working, but we recently fixed it and now we're using charcoal on the kalbi [barbecued beef short ribs]," Cho said. "We still use the skillets for bulgogi and other meats because some people like the fatty bits and if it gets too hot, the fat melts away."

● The sides

If you've always wanted to know what it's like to be a celebrity who is recognized mid-meal and then peppered with a ton of dishes "compliments of the kitchen," then Korean barbecue joints, which send out a battalion of free vegetable sides and salty snacks (called banchan) no matter who you are, are probably the closest you can get. The banchan at Gogi is as good as any in town. Of the 16 or so plates, I especially liked the smoky perilla leaves (Cho said these are tough to get and people love them, so they aren't always on offer), the fizzy-spicy kimchi and a salty, pungent bowl of crispy anchovies. With all the sides and the grilled meat, it's usually tough to order much more, but haemul pajeon (a crispy omelet-like pancake stuffed with shrimp, scallion and faux crab meat) is one of my favorite things, so I fought through the stomach pain and ordered one. I'm glad I did, because the version at Gogi ($12) is crisp and light, one of the best I've had in town.

● The drinks

Gogi has a healthy Korean beer list that

Kalbi (barbecued beef short ribs) at Gogi
KAITLYN MCQUAID PHOTOS FOR REDEYE

includes regional favorites OB and Hite ($5), but my favorite thing to drink with Korean barbecue is Hitachino Nest white ale from Japan's Kiuchi Brewery ($7), which is spicy with a touch of coriander and citrus. Gogi also serves sake and wine, but the most oddball feature might be water served not in the usual carafes, but in plastic sports bottles that feature the cheerful face of Psy—yes, the “Gangnam Style” guy.

● The service

Service at a lot of traditional Korean barbecue restaurants can be an exercise in neglect. “At most spots, the servers always dropped off the meat and walked away. We want to be more welcoming to newcomers,” Cho said. “You can cook the meat if you want to, but a lot of people don’t know what to do, so we want to make it easier for them.” With that mindset, Gogi has the right idea, but service was inconsistent during my dinner. I like that servers grill meats for you instead of letting you fend for yourself (I’ve almost smoked out a few Korean barbecue joints with my own tableside grilling techniques), but my server crowded the meat and didn’t wait for the grill to get hot enough. After the meat was grilled, she disappeared and it was tough to hail her for extra napkins or the bill.

● Bottom line

Gogi is one of the sleekest Korean barbecue joints in the city. Its vegetable side dishes and the marinade on its bulgogi are first-class, but the meats, which are the centerpoint of any Korean barbecue spot, aren’t yet on par with the smoky, well-browned treats I loved at Hae Woon Dae.

THREE TO PLAY

BY RYAN SMITH FOR REDEYE

Batman: Arkham Origins

PC, PlayStation 3, Xbox 360, Wii U

The first two releases in the "Arkham" series trumped every other superhero-based video game in history, but I'm slightly less batty for Batman's return in "Arkham Origins." Perhaps realizing they didn't have anywhere to go after killing The Joker off at the end of "Arkham City," this one is a prequel set early in the Caped Crusader's career, when Batman and the clown-painted criminal mastermind are just getting acquainted. There are a couple of cool new ideas—including a detective mode that asks you to find clues and reconstruct crime scenes to solve mysteries—but everything feels like old bat... err, old hat.

Skylanders: Swap Force

Xbox 360, PlayStation 3, Wii, Wii U, Nintendo 3DS

It's true. No self-respecting adult should play "Skylanders." It's a game directed squarely at kids, involving placing cartoonish action figures with names such as Stealth Elf and Zoo Lou on a portal that connects to your game system. But if you manage to suspend your cynical grown-up cool for a while, there's some silly fun to be had with this series, even if it has the aggravating tendency of holding the player's hand too much. The siren song for "Swap Force" is the new ability to mix and match characters' abilities by switching out the top and bottom halves of their bodies so that, for example, your robot character is suddenly granted octopus tentacles. If nothing else, you might have to pretend to buy "Swap Force" for your little brother or niece and give it a shot yourself.

Device 6

iPhone/iPad

"Device 6" is a novel experience... literally. You follow the adventures of Anna, a girl who wakes to find herself stuck in a mysterious tower full of bizarre corridors and secret rooms, not by actually controlling her, but by reading the helter-skelter text of a short story and solving cryptic puzzles. "Device 6" revels in keeping the player/reader disoriented, so if Anna turns right down a hall, the words on the screen turn too, and suddenly you're forced to adjust your iPhone to the right to keep up. It's an unsettling but completely enthralling experience that might change the way you look at mobile games.

Making a Spectacle

Redmoon throws its annual 'Boneshaker' extravaganza in its new Pilsen digs

By Julia Borcherts | FOR REDEYE

Since its 1990 inception, Redmoon has been known for breathtaking, large-scale spectacle performances—both outdoors in parks all over the city and indoors when the weather's cold. In March, Redmoon moved from West Town to its new headquarters in a massive Pilsen warehouse, and to celebrate both Halloween and the start of "indoor" season, they're throwing the third edition of "Boneshaker," their one-night-only performance-themed party. But even though festivities include nods to Halloween and Day of the Dead, don't expect zombies, witches or jack-o'-lanterns.

"We love the ritual and celebration of Halloween," producing artistic director Frank Maugeri said. "And we wanted to devise an event that was not based on the modern, consumer interpretation of Halloween—carve a pumpkin, trick or treat, watch a gory movie—and instead create a community-based experience that was thrilling and surprising and really, really fun and unexpected."

To that end, "Boneshaker" incorporates trademark large-scale spectacles featuring fire performances, giant candelabras that double as barbecue grills, a 16-foot-tall mobile DJ platform, punk rock marching band Mucca Pazzo and more. But since it's a party, you also can expect a roller rink, an indoor swing park, a power racer car track and a "Breakin' the Law" motorcycle carousel, plus two-minute live feed movies you can star in, a punch cocktail specialist, airbrush tattoo artists, food and drinks delivered via modified Segways, wine bikes and other apparatus and free bus transportation to and from a dedicated Loop location (77 W. Wacker Drive). "It's more funhouse than haunted house," Maugeri said. "There's no blood and gore. What we're doing is creating two things: wild illusion—big, giant, beautiful pictures and experiences—and unusual, interactive opportunities for people who enjoy playing together. It is the best party in the city."

So what exactly does such a party incorporate? Considering the huge size of Redmoon's new Pilsen home, the oversized scale of the various interactive contraptions and the sheer number of activities the evening offers, we asked Redmoon to help us break "Boneshaker" down by the numbers.

MODEL DIGS

Gisele and Tom Brady are soaring to new heights

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

Gisele Bündchen and Tom Brady already have an L.A. home with a moat—what more could they need? Apparently, a three-bedroom, $14 million condo in New York, according to usweekly.com. (Is it just us, or does that price tag sound a little low for celebs of their stature?) The apartment is listed as covering the entire 47th floor, but we decided to have a little more fun with the floor plan and imagine what these two hotties (and their kids) got for their millions.

WHEN MILEY MET LINDSAY

This is a best friendship that really, really doesn't need to happen. Page Six reports that Miley Cyrus was hanging out at a New York club following her "SNL" appearance Saturday when Lindsay Lohan "climbed over from her table next to the DJ booth to Miley's table" and the two "immediately began whispering." Potential topics of conversation: tongue piercings, "The Parent Trap," Wilmer Valderrama's sexuality.

That's how much Dax Shepard and Kristen Bell spent on their Beverly Hills courthouse wedding. Shepard said on Monday's "Jimmy Kimmel Live." He has yet to purchase wedding bands, but plans to do so at Costco.

Days of future awesome

We've been so hyped up about the next "Hunger Games" flick that we almost forgot about Jennifer Lawrence's OTHER superhero movie. Magneto, Storm, Professor X, Kitty Pryde, Wolverine and the rest of the gang are here to help you remember. The full trailer for "X-Men: Days of Future Past" dropped Tuesday, and all we can tell you is %&Y(%$E&^&#@$(%!!! The latest mutant movie hits theaters May 23.

THEIR NAME IS JONAS—NOT

Well OK, they still keep the last name. But the male burlesque collective known as The Jonas Brothers has officially split up, the group announced Tuesday. "I was feeling kind of trapped," Nick Jonas told People magazine. "I needed to share my heart with my brothers." Sounds like they're still best bros.

Welcome back!

A lot of really, really disturbing things happened on the last season of "Girls," among them the quick disappearance of Hannah's gay roommate, Elijah. Fear not, fans. Andrew Rannells is returning to the role in Season 3, and is set to become a series regular in Season 4, deadline.com reports. We're crossing our fingers for more cocaine-fueled raves when the HBO show comes back Jan. 12.

My ambition was never to rule the world. It was always to change the world."
